

I implemented the ``lseek()`` system call in Peppermint OS.

The implementation included editing ``syscall.h``, ``syscall.c``, ``sysfile.c``, and linking in ``usys.S``.

A user-space wrapper was added in ``user.h``, and a test file was created to verify functionality.

The system call correctly moves the file cursor and prints the new position.

All changes were tested using ``make qemu``.